Secret Fears of the Rich, Digital Rebels Taking On North Korea, Mapping Inequality in America, How the Pope is Going Green, Defending the Dream in Detroit, Plastic Surgery in Columbia.

'North Korea's Digital Underground' was the most interesting article for me. Those smuggling facts into or out of North Korea risk imprisonment and even execution. A North Korean factory worker was publicly executed 1/2010 for phoning news about the price of rice to someone in South Korea. Yet, North Korean defectors and South Korean and Japanese activists are providing information for those trapped within North Korea's borders. North Korean reporters receive small retainers and additional funds to bribe their way out of difficult situations. These efforts also benefit the U.S. - helping to avoid planted intelligence and wild rumors. TVs are set to receive only government stations, freestanding radios are illegal - though every household and business has a government-controlled radio hardwired to a central station, a volume control, but no on-off switch. No more than a few thousand North Korean researchers and high officials have access to the Internet; most citizens must settle for censored news. Owning computers is legal, but they must be registered with local authorities; printers are even rarer and closely monitored. Citizens are forbidden to own fax machines, which can be found only in post offices and businesses offices - sending a fax requires approval from a high-level employee. Free North Korea Radio's Voices of the People features man-on-the-street interviews with North Koreans, their voices digitally distorted; some are defectors living in South Korea.
